

Join a South Pacific Projects marine conservation expedition in Fiji

Help promote sustainable fisheries and work alongside remote island communities whilst improving your degree or resume.

South Pacific Projects is a UK based non-profit organisation committed to the protection of marine biodiversity. Our international volunteers carry out vital underwater marine research in Fiji on behalf of our partner communities.

- Live on a remote tropical island and SCUBA dive every day!
- Take an active role in our exciting new marine turtle and dolphin research projects.
- Work alongside Fijian researchers and scientists.
- Visit our community partners and enjoy traditional Fijian hospitality.
- Teach local children about environmental issues in our primary school clubs.

People taking career breaks find our conservation expeditions and tropical island living an excellent way to recharge their batteries.

Students who join our expeditions can access our academic network to carry out undergraduate and postgraduate research projects with our support.

We welcome international applicants of all ages to our project site in Fiji; all you have to bring is your enthusiasm, a sense of adventure and a desire to contribute to genuine conservation efforts.

Find us on:

To learn more about volunteering on our Fiji project and to read testimonials from previous volunteers, please visit: www.southpacificprojects.org

southpacific
PROJECTS

Working with...

